He lives within the hollow wood, From one clear dell he seldom ranges; His daily toil in solitude Revolves, but never changes. A still old man, with grizzled beard, Gray eye, bent shape, and smoke-tanned features, His quiet footstep is not feared By shyest woodland creatures. I love to watch the pale blue spire His scented labour builds above it; I track the woodland by his Lobeský. That same year the composer offered the finished opera to the Czech Provisional Theatre in Prague. Bedřich Smetana, who was in charge of the opera at that time, returned the work to Dvořák the following year, claiming it was unperformable. Dvořák created entirely new music to the same libretto ...

Most ancient works of literature are poetic. Born to a poor family headed by a devoutly religious father, Andersson was a woodsman and charcoal burner before he became a temperance lecturer. His first two published volumes, which made the charcoal burners and, incidentally, himself famous, were Kolarhistorier (1914; "Charcoal Burner's Tales") and Kolvaktarens visor (1915; "Charcoal Watcher's Songs"; a selection was translated into English in Charcoal-Burner's Ballad, & Other ...
